Excerpt: .Of a surety, sir, there s call enough for bravery in the service of God, and to show love to man, without quarrelling and fighting. Thank you, gentlemen, for listening to me. Your words called up the thoughts of him, and my heart was full to speaking. But I must make up; I ve to dig a grave for a little child, who is to be buried to-morrow morning, just when his playmates are trooping off to school. But tell us of Letty; is she yet alive? asked Jeremy. The old man shook his head, and struggled against a choking sigh. After a minute s pause he said She died in less than two year at after that night. She was never like the same again. She would sit thinking, on Gilbert, I guessed: but I could not blame her. We had a boy, and we named it Gilbert Dawson Knipe; he that s stoker on the London railway. Our girl was carried off in teething; and Letty just quietly drooped, and died in less than a six week. They were buried here; so I came to be near them, and away from Lindal, a place I could never abide after Letty was gone. He turned to his work, and we, having rested sufficiently, rose up, and came away. THE END. Prmkd by BALLANTYNE, HANSON 8: Co. Edinburgh and London.
