This report presents the results of part of a continuing study of the environmental effects of underwater explosion testing, and covers the practical aspects of monitoring such tests on a routine basis. In addition, this information will be useful in the planning of all underwater tests and should be particularly helpful for estimating the funding and man-power requirements. The mention of specific commercial equipment and/or brand names does not imply endorsement or recommendation for use. This work is part of the Ordnance Pollution Abatement Program of the Naval Sea Systems Command and was funded under Program Element 62765N SF57-572-391, the Review and Evaluation Work Unit.
