CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 324 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.7in. Its the summer of 1987. In the seventh year of the desperate and seemingly endless Gulf war, Iranians forces have finally achieved the great breakthrough that has brought final victory within their grasp, putting the oil-rich, pro-Western monarchies and sheikhdoms of the Gulf in instant peril and sending shock waves throughout the Middle East: They have captured the southern Iraqi port city of Basra along with a large slice of southern Iraq. The CIAs man in Teheran Hank Kutlin isnt that bothered by the news. But when 900 gung-ho Revolutionary Guards then overrun the Tipp City oil compound in nearby northern Kuwait, and threaten to begin executing the male hostages, its a different matter because Hanks only son along with his wife and baby daughter are trapped inside with hundreds of other western oil workers and their families. The first executions are scheduled to take place in just a few days time. With the American and British governments doing very little to firmly confront the looming crisis, it looks like Hank is going to have to take matters into his own hands go rogue so to speak if hes to save his sons life. . . but his options seem limited. That is until his close friend Jasper Hargreaves black Vietnam war veteran, Latin scholar and former Agency employee steps in. He has an audacious some might even say outrageous plan up his sleeve that just might work. But theyre going to need the help of a very special lady to carry it out, and that is Jaspers beautiful Iranian girlfriend Leila Ahmadi, who works for the national carrier, Iran Air. Persuading her to join the plot shouldnt be hard...
