Not illustrated. 1867 Excerpt: . . . his belief that the right treatment of the pedicle was to drop it in and close the wound, and that if success was to be secured, it was by such means. I make this statement on the authority of Dr. Oldham, who heard the remark. In a fatal case recorded by Dr. Peaslee, in the American Journal of Medical Science, July, 1865, in which this practice was adopted and death followed the operation on the 17th day, the extremity of the pedicle was found to be atrophied, but not sloughing, and the ligature was covered with an exudation of lymph, which had already become somewhat organized. In our profession, however, a theory, when once established rapidly develops, and a practice which is based on a received principle soon improves. The professional mind having realized the fact that the pedicle of an ovarian tumour may be with safety strangled by a ligature, dropped into the abdomen, and the wound closed; and having been taught by the results of experience that the strangled extremity of the pedicle did neither decompose nor set up any peritoneal mischief--looked out for some other plan of treatment, by which the presence of the foreign body--the ligature--might be done away with, and as a result, the division of the pedicle by the actual cautery has been introduced; the treatment by the ecraseur not meeting with support. It is a bold practice, and has the advantage of past experience in its favour, for from...
