TIME: EVERYTHING HAPPENS FOR A REASON (PAPERBACK)*DOWNLOAD

shawinder Johal, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Everyone is a time traveller. Travelling into the past to relive certain life events, or into the future to fantasise about how things may turn out, is a daily occurrence for almost all human beings. Projecting your happiness onto a future point is a delusion because that point never comes, and constantly harping back to the past only generates bitterness. The past has gone; you cannot change it. Time travelling in this way correlates directly to the degree of unhappiness a person experiences. You never reach that future utopia, because even if you achieve the goals you want to achieve, there will always be another set of goals that materialise before you have made it and can be happy. Happiness can only be achieved by living in, and accepting, the present moment as it is. You can make positive practical changes to your life situation, but being happy is the best way to create a better life. An inability to accept the present moment as it is creates a gap between reality and what a person imagines reality should be like. The mind tries to close this gap by running mental movies, complete with their own internal dialogues, about what should be happening instead of what has happened or is happening. This has led to the biggest addiction of modern times - compulsive thinking. Almost everyone does it; it is available 24-7. People don't know how to switch off. They think that if they relax for a second their whole life will come tumbling down, but don't realise that if they don't learn how to relax, then it definitely will. Unless you have regular time to recuperate, you can only run...
